workers fight back in the public & private sectors

2011 saw an upsurge in workers struggle in Britain fighting back against the bosses' and government offensive emulating struggles taking place across Europe. Over 2 million workers went on strike on 30 November to defend public sector pensions, while in the private sector, there have been strikes at Unilever and the incredible struggle by electricians in the construction industry. The NSSN has been at the heart of all these and many other disputes, giving support, advice and encouragement. We were initiated by the RMT - the railway workers union - in 2006 and are supported by six national unions. This is our sixth annual conference and is open to all those in the union movement who want to fight to improve working conditions and defend the gains that the employers - private and public - are desperate to take back. Come to this event and meet up with workers, activists and union reps facing the same issues as you. Join the fightback!
